Sample Plunder Cards

The accompanying pages are intended to be printed off on cardstock paper, and cut out to serve as cards to give to your players as "Relics" (for Booty) - or, in the case of the cards that list "Cargo," large amounts of loot that are too heavy for an individual character to carry, and take up cargo space on a ship.

The printed edges are only a rough guide for cutting out. You may find it useful to get a collectible card game binder (or individual pocketed CCG sheets) to organize cards in. (Failing that, a few paper clips are useful.) It's best to have them cut out ahead of the game, to save time.

Relic cards represent odd relics that pop up occasionally in booty. Rather than rolling on the Relics tables (p. 205, PotSM), choose the item you think is appropriate - or draw a card randomly. No more than one relic should be found per "booty."

Value is listed for some items in pieces of eight (or "pesos de oche"). Treasure items can be sold for this with a successful Streetwise roll. (At the GM's discretion, certain common trade items may not require such a roll. For instance, "silver reales" and "golden doubloons" are just coinage, worth the listed Value.) For Cargo, listed Value is the base selling price (see rules for Trading, p. 53, PotSM).

Retail. Items (Cargo, Relic, or otherwise) that list Retail value only sell for a quarter of this amount with a successful Streetwise roll - or half Retail upon a raise (see rules for Selling Goods, p. 52, PotSM).

Weapons. Several of the weapons presented here do not follow the pattern for the superior weapons presented in the book. In many cases, the weapon possesses just one benefit (+1 to damage, Fighting, Shooting, or Parry) rather than the two or more common in the book. These weapons have correspondingly smaller increases to their value compared to the "better" Relic weapons found in the book (p. 206, PotSM).

Treasure. Items marked "treasure" are made of precious materials, or are otherwise valuable as trade goods. (See Value, above.) Also, some "treasure" items just might secretly have other properties not advertised, at the GM's discretion. (For instance, perhaps the Falcon Statue is secretly made of gold, but only covered in dark enamel. But if someone were to claw away at it to find out - and discover that there's no gold in there after all - then the statue has been damaged in vain, and its Value reduced. Or, perhaps an item may possess a curse only revealed once its new owner hears a warning from a crazy old sailor about it.)

Cargo is too large and heavy for a single character to carry. It takes up the number of cargo spaces listed (default of 1). As a house rule, any time a ship is captured as a prize, there's a 10% chance of finding a Special Cargo. You can then randomly (or deliberately) choose a Cargo card to offer as part of the booty. (Please note, some of the sample Cargo cards in this set aren't necessarily all that "special," but are included for variety.)

Doubting Thomases may not use item properties with "Lucky," "Blessed," or "Blessing" in the name - since such abilities depend upon belief.

Remaining (X). When found, any cargo item has a number of "units" equal to the value in parentheses. Once units are expended, the remaining units may be penciled into the provided space. For example, the lumber represents raw materials usable by a shipwright (p. 42, PotSM). Value of the cargo is reduced by number of units expended (except in the case of cattle, where the "cattle feed" is just an accompanying supply).

Knights of Malta. The second page of this set features several items I created for a "Pirates of the Barbary Coast" campaign. The "Knights of Malta" may be found in (appropriately enough) Malta - one of the few areas of the Mediterranean free of the influence of the Ottoman Empire and the Barbary Coast Corsairs. If a good-hearted hero returns such an item (without expecting recompense) to the order, he gains a bonus to Fame as word spreads of his heroism, piety, and generosity.
